“The eye as a camera”

by

Professor Philip Bloom

Professor Philip Bloom trained at Bristol Medical School longer ago than he cares to remember. He is Professor of Ophthalmology at Imperial College with clinical fellowships at Moorfields and The Western Eye Hospitals and has interests across the range of surgical Ophthalmology. His biography on the hospital websites helpfully informs us that he is a male, a fact that he no doubt will be pleased to have confirmed. He is a keen photographer and has provided 'the eyes' on a number of overseas trips which I have shared with him. He is married to Fiona, who is a GP and Medical Chair of the West London CCG and therefore is responsible for controlling him both at home and at work.
